Vanity would make me consider/claim that I have been entirely dependent on my own character/it has been entirely my character that led my life, (doesn't old/wise Heraclitus assure us that destiny is/represents our own character?) or that fate chose special circumstances to guide me on one way/path or another. Yet./Nevertheless, the truth makes me keep my modesty/forces me to remain humble. I (have) depended on many details and the fence I sat on before (my) leaving for secondary school meant/represented/was the turning point of my life. If I had jumped it, undoubtedly I would have been/would be another person now. As long as/Since I didn't do it, I entered another corridor of (my) destiny.
